WORLD'S SMALLEST POLITICAL QUIZ TAKEN BY MORE THAN 23 MILLION PEOPLE

INDIANAPOLIS – More than 23 million people have taken the World's Smallest Political Quiz online as of mid-March 2016, according to Brett Bittner, Executive Director of The Advocates for Self-Government. The Quiz, a simple-to-take assessment of political tendencies that can be found at www.theadvocates.org/quiz, is designed to help people identify where they fit in today's political spectrum.

"The Quiz consists of ten questions on issues of personal and economic freedom," says Bittner. "A quick tabulation of the results accurately determines where a person falls on the political map, whether liberal, conservative, libertarian, centrist or authoritarian."

The Quiz is based on the "Nolan Chart," which was created by David Nolan in 1969 to look at the political spectrum beyond the "left-right" line. Marshall Fritz, founder of The Advocates for Self-Government, designed the ten-question quiz to accompany the "Nolan Chart" in 1987, thereby allowing people to easily and accurately perform a self-assessment. The Quiz was first posted online in 1995.

"In today's world of fractured politics and 24-hour punditry, we're pleased that the World's Smallest Political Quiz has helped so many people figure out where they fit into the political landscape," Bittner says. "As quiz takers realize there is more to the political spectrum than the old, tired 'left-right' paradigm, they often discover more about their true beliefs and seek out more than sound bites and bumper stickers for solutions to today's issues."
